Transforming Curriculum for Sustainability

Peggy Barlett, Goodrich C. White Professor of Anthropology at Emory University, co-founded and administers the Piedmont Project, the longest-running curriculum development program for sustainability in the country. In celebration of Women’s History Month, Barlett will speak about the project’s history, the workshops to help over 400 leaders from other universities copy our model, and some of the latest strategies for curriculum change documented in her newest book, Transforming Higher Education: Stories and Strategies for Sustainability (edited with Geoffrey Chase, MIT, 2013).
