

THE RELIGION AND HEALTH CONNECTION

invites you to lunch and a presentation on:

Healthworlds...Health Systems: Connecting the Dots

Lessons learned and next steps from the African Religious Health Assets Program - 2007 Colloquium

Speaker: Debbie Jones, Senior Program Director, Interfaith Health Program,
Hubert Department of Global Health, Rollins School of Public Health

Response Panel:

- Dr. Karen Scheib, Co-Chair, Religion, Health, & Science Collaborative, Associate Professor of Pastoral Care and Pastoral Theology
- Dr. Peter Brown, Director, Center for Health, Culture, and Society, Professor of Anthropology and Global Health
- Matthew Bersagel-Braley, PhD candidate, Graduate School of Arts and Science
- Stephanie Doan, MPH Candidate, Rollins School of Public Health

The African Religious Health Assets Program (ARHAP) is an international research collaborative working at the intersection of religion and public health, with a focus on southern Africa. ARHAP seeks to align and enhance the work of religious and health leaders and public policy decision-makers in their collaborative efforts to meet the challenge of disease and to promote sustainable health, especially for those who live in poverty or under marginal conditions. In March 2007, the presenters attended the 3rd ARHAP International Research Colloquium near Cape Town, South Africa. The meeting focused on drawing public health research and thinking more firmly into the ARHAP framework and developing effective methods for community and leadership engagement.

Tuesday, April 24, 2007
11:45 a.m.
Cox Hall Ballrooms 1 & 2

Reservations required ($6.00 for lunch, $3.00 for students)
Please RSVP to Ivan Maddox at (404) 727-6225 or cmadd01@emory.edu

Sponsored by Emory University's Office of the Dean of the Chapel and Religious Life ·
Interfaith Health Program · Religion and Health Collaborative